What is The IELTS Exam?

The IELTS test is a valid international test held under the supervision of the University of Cambridge, England, and the IDP organization. Applicants of this test who intend to study or immigrate abroad can participate in the IELTS test and obtain the required passing score. This test is conducted in accredited centers under the supervision of the Ministry of Science or the Assessment Organization.

Also, many applicants for this exam are looking for an IELTS English language certificate to participate in the doctoral interview and pass the doctoral degree, so they have a better chance of passing the doctoral interview.

The IELTS test includes four skills: Listening, Reading, Writing, and Speaking, which candidates must obtain the required score in each stage; In this test, the listening part is held orally to evaluate the candidate after the IELTS test.

What is the difference between Academic and General Training modules?

The Academic and General Training IELTS exams are the same in terms of format, and the test items are the same, but they differ in terms of the test content in the writing and reading sections.

Considering that academic candidates must be able to understand academic, and scientific texts while studying at the university, texts from academic books and scientific magazines are included in the Reading section to improve the candidate's skills and measure the understanding of academic and university materials. For this reason, the vocabulary level in the academic reading section is a little higher and more vocabulary knowledge is needed. Also, in the Writing section, the topics given in Tasks 1 and 2 are related to academic and scientific topics to determine the candidate's writing level in the field of academic writing.

However, regarding the IELTS General Training test, the content of the Reading section is mostly about general topics such as advertising, guidance, everyday issues, etc., so that the candidate's understanding of the material is determined. In the Writing section of the test, General Training Task 1 includes writing a letter, and in the second task, a general writing topic.
